Rex is a litigation and arbitration partner, qualified in both Hong Kong and New South Wales, Australia. His legal education and dual qualification provide him with a comparative common law perspective. Born and raised in Hong Kong, Rex combines an international legal outlook with an understanding of local business practices, traditional family values and intergenerational expectations. This assists him in disputes where commercial interests, family relationships and cultural sensitivities overlap.

Rex advises on international commercial disputes and private wealth litigation, particularly where business interests, family assets and cross-border issues intersect. His recent work includes assisting international enterprises in resolving commercial disputes, shareholders' and directors' matters, breaches of duty and commercial fraud. He also advises on urgent injunctive relief, asset recovery, the enforcement of judgments and arbitral awards, and court proceedings in support of arbitration.

Rex's recent practice has focused on advising and representing private clients, including high-net-worth individuals and families, in disputes involving land and property, trusts, contentious probate and estate administration. He acts for individuals, personal representatives and beneficiaries in matters concerning assets, beneficial interests in property, the validity of wills and the administration of estates. His experience includes resulting and constructive trust claims, inheritance and family provision matters, disputes arising from ownership, project development, tenancies and encumbrances, as well as building management issues.

Rex is fluent in Chinese (Cantonese and Mandarin) and English.
